HEAD OF DIGITAL INITIATIVES AND OUTREACH
WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW

Dear Readers,

Welcome to a new issue and new volume of The CRIV Sheet. I'm continuing this year as editor, and am as excited to release this new issue as I am shocked at how quickly the fall is escaping us: November already!

Our CRIV harvest yields a helpful and thorough survey of business-related topics. We hope you find it interesting and informative. We also have a special feature on the cover of this issue. We hope you find it interesting and informative.

ment, and tenure. If you are interested in becoming a member of CRIV, be sure to respond to AALL's volunteer outreach by December 15. We would love to see you come on board!

- If you have a vendor issue that you would like CRIV's assistance with, visit the CRIV Vendor Support page.

Not every institution has the business research focus or especially when such products are often prohibitively expensive.

At schools such as my own at Vanderbilt Law, we have a formal Law and Business Program with seven full-time faculty members. Many of these faculty also hold joint appointments at Vanderbilt's Owen Graduate School of Management. We also have clinics devoted to transactional law, and I teach a credit-bearing course on business and securities research.

At schools like Vanderbilt, there is an almost inelastic demand for business information. Libraries similarly requiring a broader range of business databases than traditional legal resources can provide. It follows that with corporate clients accounting for a great deal of their workload.

in corporate internships for course credit. Though librarians who are literate in these resources and uses may be comfortable with some of the language used, those with the actual authority to sign the agreements often are not, either out of caution or by simply not understanding the dynamics involved. Therefore, it is incumbent upon librarians seeking access to these units or collections departments for new types of uses to “future-proof” their contracts.

After licenses are negotiated and products arrive on campus, additional work may be necessary to ensure that relevant terms are easy for users to understand and clearly visible from all resource access points. Rather than creating a climate of restrictive use, make it easy for stakeholders to understand appropriate uses for each resource, yet be clear that diligence is required because in reaction to the pandemic. Both projects grew out of a rethinking of the nature and needs of the community. The projects were designed to completely address those needs.

The program began with a description of the initiatives undertaken by the State of Oregon Law Library and the Hennepin County Law Library, followed by questions from the moderator about the motivation, inspirations, and evolution of the initiatives, as well as the collaborations that led to the projects' success. The program ended after attendees broke into small groups to discuss and then report on the potential opportunities and challenges of similar programs in other contexts.

Cathryn Bowie described the State of Oregon Law Library's work with the Department of Corrections and the types of assistance and resources traditionally needed by and made available to incarcerated individuals in the state.

The State Law Library in replying to those requests in print, Bowie noted that the responses often reached the individuals. The State of Oregon Law Library reached out to the Department of Corrections to better understand the needs of incarcerated individuals and the resources available to them. Thanks to funding provided by the state, the law library determined to cover the costs of the licensing fees associated with legal research databases for the Department of Corrections across the state.

With monies freed up thanks to the State Law Library, the Department of Corrections created a secure, cloud-based, internet architecture to support the maintenance of legal research databases.

CRIV holds semiannual calls with four legal vendors: Bloomberg BNA, LexisNexis, Thomson Reuters, and Wolters Kluwer. CRIV publishes notes from the calls as they become available both in The CRIV Sheet and on the CRIV Blog. For this issue, we have notes from the most recent calls with Bloomberg Law and LexisNexis.
